ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This book has its origins in “Aftermaths: Exile, Migration, Diaspora,” an international conference held in April 2004 at the University of Wisconsin–Milwaukee and sponsored by the Center for International Education. The essays build upon the presentations of the conference speakers, as well as two solicited articles.

The editors would like to thank the staff of the Center for International Education at the University of Wisconsin–Milwaukee and its tirelessly generous director, Patrice Petro, whose vision and energy enabled this volume to come to fruition. The acuity and dedication of Thomas Maguire were indispensable in giving shape to a collection of essays that crosses numerous geographic as well as historical boundaries. Also, the hard work and expertise of Sara West Tully, Anne Banda, Amy Kuether, and Robin Leephaibul were crucial to the success of the conference. We are grateful for the support of the University of Wisconsin–Milwaukee Center for Latin American and Caribbean Studies and its inspiring director, Professor Kristin Ruggiero, as well as the University of Wisconsin–Milwaukee Departments of Anthropology, Communication, English, French, Italian, and Comparative Literature. We also gratefully acknowledge the U.S. Department of Education, whose generous support for the conference came in the form of a Title VI program grant that recognized and funded the University of Wisconsin–Milwaukee Center for International Education as a National Resource Center in Global Studies.

Finally, the editors would like to thank Leslie Mitchner, editor in chief at Rutgers University Press, for her staunch support of this project and her commitment to the series in International Studies. We would also like to express our appreciation of the work done by Rachel Friedman in bringing this collection to press and of the careful copyediting of Monica Phillips.
